Cathedral High School teacher to speak at Ball State program

Cathedral journalism students to participate in BSU annual “J Day”

INDIANAPOLIS—April 16, 2014—Tony Willis, the faculty moderator of the newspaper and yearbook at Cathedral High School, will be one of the session speakers at the annual Ball State University High School Journalism Day on April 25.

Willis, who is in his first year at Cathedral after teaching journalism and advising the student newspaper at Jeffersonville and Carmel high schools, will present a session for high school journalists on improving their interviewing skills.

Eight Cathedral students also will attend the annual J Day program, participating in small-group sessions and skills workshops. Those students are Christopher Bessler, Annie Browning, Maren Doll, Amanda Keilman, Nicole Shoaf, Katie Swanton, Kara Williams and Emerson Wolff.

Hundreds of high school students and dozens of their teachers flock to the Ball State campus each spring for the event. “J Day gives students who will be on a publications staff next year the opportunity to hone their skills and prepare for producing an outstanding yearbook and newspaper during the 2014-2015 school year,” Willis said

Willis has spoken at the Ball State event more than a dozen times and in 2002, during the program's closing ceremonies, was inducted into the Ball State Journalism Day Hall of Fame.
